NOTICE

The current weather forecast for Friday, February 8, 2013, predicts 12-plus inches of snow. We have not had a storm like that in quite some time. All residents should be aware that deep snow requires the DPW to open up roads initially, and later to push back the drifts to the curb. The reason we must push the snow back is that we need to create room in case there is a subsequent storm within a few days, which frequently happens in February. If we do not push back, there will be no room for the additional snow.

People frequently complain that they have cleared the end of their driveways, and along come the DPW plow trucks and fills them in. We are well aware of this, but there is no other alternative for us. It would serve residents well to await that second push back until they open their driveway ends.
